St. Thomas More College Celebrates 75 Years: 1936-2011

Prehistory

THE YEAR 2011 MARKS 75 YEARS SINCE ST. THOMAS MORE College (STM) was established as a Catholic college federated with the University of Saskatchewan in Saskatoon. The efforts involved in the founding of this institution called for faith, commitment and, most of all, a vision of Catholic higher education shared by both the Catholic community and the University. Such a common vision was not realized until 1936; thus St. Thomas More College had its beginnings at a most unlikely time, during the Great Depression of the 1930s in Saskatchewan.

Although their hope to have a Catholic college at the new provincial University of Saskatchewan had been publicly announced by Saskatoon Catholics as early as 1913, with an encouraging response from University President Walter Murray at that time, no real progress had been made for the next decade or so. In 1926, the Saskatoon Catholic lay men regrouped and decided to take up the college question again. They formed the Newman Society and were able to bring Toronto priest/scholar Dr. Basil Markle to Saskatoon to teach Scholastic Philosophy at the university and serve as chaplain to Catholic university students. Markle began his teaching and chaplaincy work in September 1926; the next year, the Newman Society purchased land on the edge of the campus and built a white house (Newman Hall), with living space for Markle, a chapel, and Newman clubrooms for the students. With these encouraging developments, it had seemed that a Catholic college would soon follow, but it was to be another ten years before there would be the "meeting of the minds" needed for the project to go forward. Early in January 1936, the Saskatchewan bishops met with the Newman Society and gave their approval in principle; they stated strongly, however, that it would be "absolutely impossible, owing to present financial conditions," to go forward with the college plan at that time.

"Absolutely impossible" as it seemed, the long-awaited approval had been given and, within a matter of months, in spite of all practical considerations, the founding of the Catholic college was underway. By September, the first two Basilians had arrived in Saskatoon, the name "St. Thomas More College" had been placed over the door of the white house, and 39 students had registered through St. Thomas More College for the academic year 1936-37. In spring 1937, the first five STM graduates were awarded their BA degrees at the University of Saskatchewan convocation.

And the rest, as they say, is history . . .

Join us as we recall some of the key events and images of St. Thomas More College's first 75 years.

Terrence Downey 2011-

Looking to the past with gratitude, to the future with hope

The 75th anniversary of St. Thomas More College in 2011 provides an opportunity once again for the college community to celebrate with wonder and gratitude the many blessings, challenges, and achievements of years past – and to look, with renewed hope and confidence, to the future of this unique federated Catholic college in the heart of the prairies.

Needless to say, there have been many changes in the college since its beginnings in the white house in 1936. In the ensuing years, St. Thomas More College has come to hold a respected place within the University of Saskatchewan and the larger academic world for its teaching, scholarly work, community outreach and ministry to the church community.

During this anniversary year, STM gives thanks to, and for, the many students, faculty and staff; supporters, colleagues and friends – and all who have been part of the college's academic work and faith community over the years .

St. Thomas More College particularly acknowledges with gratitude the Congregation of St. Basil, whose members were key players in the founding and formative years of the college and now, happily, continue their pastoral ministry to the STM community. May the spirit of the Basilians who were part of this college and its work continue to be present in the heartwood of STM in the years to come.

Please join us as we celebrate STM's first 75 years and prepare to meet the challenges of the years ahead. In the spirit of the groups and individuals who worked to establish this college, may we continue this good work with faith, commitment and a common vision.

Let us rejoice!
